

My trip to the World Equestrian Games—will it even happen?
Sept 13, 2018

Last spring I was super excited to be offered a spot on the veterinary team for the World Equestrian Games in Tryon. As a member of the Para-Dressage support team, I'd be helping to support our athletes and their horses, and have the chance to get a real behind-the-scenes experience at one of the biggest equestrian events in the world. What an opportunity!

Little did I know that in the days leading up to my leaving for the games, I'd be focusing my attention on something even bigger than the games--a hurricane of epic proportions. Will the games even be able to continue? Today I am checking weather reports hourly and hoping my flight to Charlotte, North Carolina on Saturday morning will still take off as scheduled. At this point, I'm not sure what kind of adventure my trip to Tryon will turn out to be, but I'll keep you posted as things progress!
